ROSE CLASSIFICATIONS EXPLAINED:

CL – Climber – Climbing roses produce naturally long canes that can be trained on a trellis, fence, pergola, or many other types of structures (use your imagination). Climbers with shorter canes can also be left to grow as fountain-like shrubs.

FL – Floribunda – These roses are generally medium-sized, compact plants with medium-sized flowers borne in clusters. The stem lengths are shorter in comparison to Grandifloras & Hybrid Teas.

Flora-tea – Hybrid Tea-like flowers on a compact, mini-flora plant

GC – Groundcover – These are shrub roses with a spreading habit (wider than they are tall) & good disease resistance. These can be used in the landscape for low-growing mass plantings.

GR – Grandiflora – These roses fall between Hybrid Teas & Floribundas. They have large, high-centered flowers in small clusters rather than on single stems. The plants are usually taller & broader than Hybrid Teas. The individual stems within each cluster are suitable for cutting.

HT – Hybrid Tea – These roses have large, high-centered flowers singly atop long, strong stems (when you think of a long-stemmed rose in a vase, it's probably a Hybrid Tea).

Min – Miniature – These are the perfect roses for small garden spaces or decorative pots on a balcony or patio. Ours are hybridized to be garden roses (unlike grocery store minis), so they are excellent garden performers. Many have small Hybrid Tea-like flowers with all other parts of the plant in proportion to the blooms.

SH – Shrub – Shrub roses are usually free-blooming plants with differing flower sizes & forms in a broad variety of mature sizes but with a full, bushy habit & usually good disease resistance. Most are grown on their own roots.

TR – Tree rose – One or two varieties of roses budded onto an 18", 24", or 36" trunk
